

Abstract

Cirsium pitcheri species endemic to the Great Lakes region. Our study investigated the spatial distribution of C. pitcheri and its relationship to sand erosion and vegetation density on a blowout in Rosy Mound Natural Area. Methods used in the study included using erosion pins to measure changes

Methods

Acknowledgements

Works Cited